

Grid Eagles Lose Another Coach as Millner Resigns

HERSHEY, Pa., Sept. 8 (AP).—Wayne Millner resigned Monday night as head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League because of poor health. Assistant Coach Jim Trimble was named to succeed him.

Vince McNally, general manager of the Eagles, announced at the club's training camp here that Millner had requested he be relieved of his head coaching assignment "due to advice that continuance with his present duties and responsibilities might impair his health."

McNally said that the Eagles regretted Millner's request and had asked him to remain with the club as assistant to the general manager in charge of player personnel and game scouting. "He has agreed to do so," McNally said.

At 39, Millner was one of the youngest head coaches in professional football. He took over the reins last season after the late Alvin (Bo) McMillin had been forced to retire as Eagles' coach, also because of poor health.
